

GEDDES REECHOES

HARDING WAR VIEW

"This Must Not Be Again" Ambassador Tells 400 of British Blood Here.

KING SENDS GREETINGS

American Answer to Freedom's Call in Late Conflict Is Applauded.

Sir Auckland C. Geddes, British Ambassador, brought to their feet with cheers and applause 400 members of the British Schools and Universities Club of New York when he echoed last night the solemn protest of President Harding who said, as he stood above the flag draped coffin of the soldier dead on Monday, "This must not be again!"

The Ambassador further made the point that it is the duty of the great English-speaking nations of the world to stand together unitedly for civilization and individual liberty that the earth again may be rent by the horrors of a great war.

Sir Auckland was the principal guest at the Empire Day dinner of the club, held in the Waldorf-Astoria. His audience were graduates of British schools and universities. Before his address he had unveiled a bronze tablet bearing the 127 names of club members and sons of members who had taken part in the war. The roster was led by the name of the Prince of Wales, while the second and third names enrolled were those of the Duke of Connaught and Sir Auckland himself. All three are honorary members of the club.

FELICITATIONS FROM KING

The Ambassador read a cable message received from King George in response to a greeting from the club. The King acknowledged "with greatest pleasure" the message of friendship, loyalty and devotion, recalling the deeds of your fellows in the great war. In behalf of the Empire, he tendered thanks for the commemorative occasion and said: "My son is proud that his name stands at the head of your honored roll and is glad to greet his fellow soldiers in arms."

Sir Auckland said that as the memories of the war become more dim there is danger that its glorious memory will be lost. He spoke of the great British Empire, but cautioned his hearers not to forget the terrible price it had cost. "That empire whose day we celebrate," he said, "has been bought at a price which is not for the individual liberty, on this tablet are the names of men who have given their lives for that age-old struggle for individual freedom. It has been a great price, we have to pay a price that can be measured only in mothers' hearts."

The Ambassador spoke of the loyalty with which the British or American born, flocked to the standard when the Empire was imperiled. "The oceans of the world," he said, "were the scene in which they came from every land, came in response to the old call for the protection of human freedom, the call to which they responded once again. They showed themselves as responsive to that call as had been their forefathers."

The speaker paid a special tribute to the hundreds of Americans who fought for England either in her own armies or those of her dominions before America had entered the war. "They just simply forgot to mention to us that they were neither English nor Canadian," he said, "but our cause was theirs. That is a bond between out people that the empire will never forget."

MEMORIES TO BE CHERISHED

Sir Auckland referred to the comradeships, the fellowships and even the humorous phases of the war as memories that should be properly cherished. "But," he said, "let us ever remember the horrors of war, its evils, its unspeakable devastation and sorrow. Let us resolve that, as the President said yesterday as he stood above the bodies of your soldier dead, 'This must not be again!'"

"Another war cannot be waged without horrors indescribable. Terrible new weapons have been devised, deadly gases, bacteria to spread wholesale disease too frightful to contemplate. It must not be!"

"Let us never forget the awful cost of war. But at the same time let us not forget that the price of eternal freedom is eternal watchfulness. We must not drowse in the watch tower."

The Rev. John Williams, president of the club, acted as toastmaster and introduced a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, reciting that the club, "many of whose members were born and educated in Ireland, extends to the Parliament of Ulster their hearty good wishes and earnest prayer that under the guidance of God the results of its deliberations and its moderation may prove an inspiration to the inhabitants of the whole country and that unity and concord, peace and prosperity may be established from one end of Ireland to the other."

TO EXPLAIN "ARRANGED" DIVORCE

Supreme Court Justice Tierney yesterday ordered Mrs. Anna Feldman of 320 West 146th street, who wrote him last week that she and her husband had "arranged" the evidence whereby she got a divorce, to appear before him in his chambers this morning and explain things. A similar order was given to David J. Gladstone of 29 Nassau street, her attorney, and Gabriel Feldman, the defendant, who is a world war veteran.

ANGELL ADVOCATES

BROADER EDUCATION

President-Elect of Yale Sees Need of More Cooperation Between Colleges.

STUDIES MANY SYSTEMS

Praises Loyalty of Graduate and Fine Spirit of Devotion Shown in Emergency.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 24.—The need and opportunity for improving relations among American institutions of higher learning were stressed by President-elect James Rowland Angell of Yale University in an address to-night.

"It is interesting," he said, "how very provincial our American institutions are about other American institutions and how little they know of what is going on outside their own sphere of activity. 'That is a thing which of course only time can cure, but it surely is one of the obligations of those of us who are giving our lives to higher education as well as of those who have been beneficiaries of our institutions of higher learning to see that those things are safeguarded in our own American democracy.'"

"It is certainly necessary that we should take a reasonably intelligent view as to those things which are being done about the matter of the preceptorial system at Princeton and how it is working out. And it is a matter of concern to us to know how our friends at Amherst are succeeding in their attempt to revive interest in the classical studies. And it is a matter of interest that you should know how to work out some combination of the professional with the classical education. Those are all things that any man who is interested in higher education should have some knowledge of and some interest in."

"I feel, therefore, that there is a considerable opportunity of improving our relations among American institutions of higher learning by some more self-conscious examination of the education movement as it goes on in centers other than our own. And my belief is that we are getting to see that education is not the thing that we have in our own person or in our own group or in the next college town that we happen to know about, but in this great country it is necessarily more varied, and this great variety is necessary and should be encouraged."

"We have furnished leaders, but we are now slowly to advance through raising the general level of intelligence through the function of education in a democracy, and it is absolutely essential in a democracy that you should have the highest possible level of intelligence if you are going to have a Government that is worthy of the name."

Dr. Angell praised the loyalty of the American college graduate and added: "In our American college life this fine spirit of devotion is exposed to many dangers through the element of competitive athletics or the element of ignorance. The competitive athletic idea we are learning to handle rather wisely. We are becoming more openminded about it, and I have no more anxiety that we shall be able to place it and carry it on on a very high plane."

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard, congratulated Yale on having obtained Dr. Angell for president and Dr. Angell on having the courage to accept the position.

The body of Arthur Masters, a naval architect of 72 West Thirty-sixth street, was found last night in Long Island Sound at New Rochelle by John Stroller. Identification was made by his daughter, Miss Caroline Masters, who said that her father had been missing from home since May 14.

Dr. Keaton Hall performed an autopsy and said that one side of the face had been paralyzed. The police believe that Mr. Masters fell into the water and was drowned after he had suffered a paralytic stroke. Besides his daughter he is survived by one brother, Charles Masters, and one sister.
